

ID Digital - Script for Call to Action Part of Prezi

“Now that you have listened to all the elements involved in becoming a good digital citizen, it’s time to ask yourself a few questions.

“How well do I do at being a good digital citizen?”

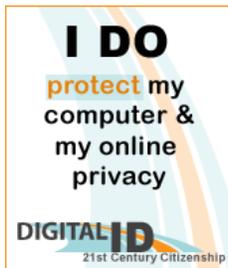

To help you answer that big question, see if you can you answer “yes” to these 4 sets of questions:

- Do I think twice before sending a post that might be hurtful or offensive, or misinterpreted by others?
- Do I refuse to forward any texts or posts that are hurtful or disrespectful of others?
- Do I speak out for others that are being bullied with the message, “That’s not cool.”?
- Do I tell a trusted adult when I, or others around me, are being bullied?

- Do I use social media in a positive way that reflects my values and my integrity?
- Do I post only those things online that if a future employer were to google me, they would have a positive impression of me?
- Do I pay attention to the kinds of tags and comments my friends post about me?
- Do I realize that once something is posted online, I can never completely undo it?

- Do I always try to use Creative Commons labeled-for-reuse images and graphics for my projects?
- Do I always cite my sources when I am using information & graphics generated by others?
- Do I respect the rights of creators to be compensated fairly for their work, and choose not to pirate music or video?
- Do I try to contribute my own work under Creative Commons licensing for others to use, as long as they give me proper credit?

- Do I protect my privacy by having strong and powerful passwords that I keep confidential?
- Do I question and guard against all online requests for personal information, being aware of scams, phishing, and stranger danger?
- Do I refuse to download any video, music, or other file unless it is from a trusted (and not pirated!) source?

If you can say, “I DO” to most or all of these questions, then congratulations!
You are a strong Digital Citizen.
